This Weeks Run...

Run No:	Hares:	Place:	Date:
1168	Absolute W*nker, Bravefart	Wong Nai Chung Reservoir	13 SEP 2009

The Warm Up

Today was an especially ugly day in what has seemed to be a brutal summer. The sky looked like one of those Singapore days after the Indonesians have finished burning everything in sight. But it wasn't smoke; just really hot, humid, stagnant air that looked so miserable that you didn't want to venture outside.

But outside we went being the hashers we are. And to one of our favorite starting points, Wong Nai Chung Reservoir, the place next to the petrol (gas) station. An A to B out of this locale makes it very hard to slip away and do some shopping, so there was Not Yet having resigned herself to actually having to do the hash instead of quietly slipping away for a shopping trip. The Virgin Mary was being especially unsociable having her head buried in a trade publication and reading up on how to make aircraft acquisitions. But a hint as to how things were going to go that day, one had only to look at Bravefart who had just finished haring and whose legs had the appearance of having been through a paper shredder. Oh boy!

Absolute Wanker gave the briefing, and probably the most accurate one in awhile. The Rambos was set to be a long hard slog, lots of shiggy, slippery downhills, old rusty pipes, a huge hill, etc. I can't wait!

The Run

Well once again I am the scribe and all of our Google Map people are away so I'll have to rely on my memory. So once again a very brief description of the run.

I always have a bad feeling when a hash promising very big hills starts off going downhill. But down we went as the On-On was down Deep Water Bay Road. Always one to enjoy the local architecture, Dr. Doom noticed that one of the houses looked like the Santa Barbara Mission, and having now just looked it up, yes it does. With the money that is on this hill, you can have your house look like just about anything you want.

We found a trail going up, and a sign pointing towards Black's Link. Split time, Rambo's up and Wimp's horizontal. I went up with the Rambo's. Up Up we went till we got to Black's Link and then took that Westbound. We then hit another trail, to the left with a sign pointing towards Aberdeen reservoir. A very nice flat trail. Just when everything seemed not to bad we found the bit that was to become our long hard slog.

Usually I have to do this "all by myself" but today I was in very good company of G-String, Hasher Lavender, Dick the Shit and Hasher Adam. The five of us began our slogging. Dick the Shit was having heat problems on the way up but had a personal ventilation machine with the name of G-String, fanning him with his sweat soaked shirt as we went up. I sadly did not receive such attention. Then we found out just how high we had to go when we saw this speck, way up there with a name of Dog Turd, jumping up and down screaming On-On. All we could do is mutter to ourselves.

After reaching the top of the hill, we found our rusty old pipe and went slipping down the hill. Dick the Shit having no further heat problems on the way down zoomed off with G-String with neither to be seen again.

After negotiating the shiggy, slippery mud and old rusty pipe we were spit out onto Middle Gap Road where an "On-Home" was most welcome and took the three of us to the B which was the Wanchai Gap playground. Having so thoroughly enjoyed the hash and happy to be done we arrived with smiles on our faces to the confusion of Bite'n'Suck who thought we were up to something other than good clean hashing!

The Circle

What started as a usual circle had to retreat to a shelter as a very big thunderstorm began its rage and then a scramble as the drainage system was overwhelmed and a torrent of water threatened to wash away all hash gear left on the ground. Here are the Down-Downs...

The On-On

In the downpour, many of us after getting drenched took the bus for the treacherous ride down the hill to Wanchai. But we lost many of our Filipina hashers and Dr. Doom to the local Pinoy restaurant. I felt badly for Bravefart and Lesbian Buttslap as they were left to carry 48 cans of beer and other stuff through the rain. I wasn't able to help though as I'm missing next week's run. Some of us did make it to Sabah for a great Birthday On-On. Thank -You hares for a great day!
